

The dangers of media consolidation loom larger than ever with Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to air an anti-Kerry documentary just days before the election. They are forcing their stations to comply with this order.

The law states that Sinclair (and other media ownership companies) serve the public interest in exchange for using public airwaves free of charge. When large companies control the airwaves, their one-sided commentaries could undermine our very democracy of which we are so proud.

Sinclair's actions are an example of why we must strengthen media ownership rules. Thank You,
Louise Goodman
